The new EPA lead regulation, Renovation, Repair and Painting Rule (RRP), becomes effective April 22, 2010 which requires building professionals to become "Certified Renovators". The regulations apply to all contractors, property managers and other building professionals who disturb painted surfaces while conducting plumbing, electrical, painting, drywall, flooring, window replacement, landscaping, construction, renovation, remodeling and demolition work. The rule applies to work that disturbs painted surfaces in residential houses, apartments, condominiums, day care facilities and schools built prior to 1978.

The San Diego Chapter of the Indoor Air Quality Association (IAQA) will be hosting a 1-day certification course in San Diego to provide the necessary training and certification to building professionals. Firms must have one or more "Certified Renovators" present at the job site where known or suspected lead-based paint is disturbed. Furthermore, all renovation workers must be trained in the use of lead-safe practices. Fines for violation can be up to $37,500 per occurrence.

Take this opportunity and become certified or have your staff certified through this one time special event hosted by the San Diego IAQA Chapter. The class size is limited and we expect the course to fill up rapidly, so sign-up early and do not miss your local certification class. The certification class fee is $195.00 for non IAQA members and $170.00 for IAQA members. Fees include a course manual and a certification card which will be issued at the end of the class upon successful completion of the course exam.
